

Recommendations for creating bilateral networks

Collaboration between EU and Brazil

Engage a wide variety of stakeholders from different sectors

Continued funding is crucial for developing and fostering the highest quality international research and innovation

Maximise the exploitation of resources and skill-sets available; Minimise unnecessary duplication of effort and use of resources.

Facilitate reproducibility and international comparability through regular communication and training to foster the development and adoption of methodological standards

Take into consideration the administrative burden and hidden costs associated with the establishment and maintenance of networks

Use the expertise of financial agencies to be responsible for the agreements and financial support of the grantees

Meetings in person bring lots of possibilities for new funding opportunities, collaborations and close interactions

Clearly defined roles and responsibilities for partner members is crucial

Based on the insights from 5 EU-BR bilateral cooperation networks funded by the INCOBRA project in 2018

